ECOSYSTEMS OF COMMERCIAL SPACE IN THE INDO-PACIFIC

1. How have the last 18 months changed the way we use and interact with commercial spaces, what are the biggest shifts?
2. If we look at how commercial architecture has been commissioned and briefed, it has generally been at the behest of the employer and how the employee can be happy, comfortable and satisfied through a lens of productivity. Has this shifted now? How so?
3. What are the different kinds of commercial models we're seeing across the region, and how do these differ in a regional context?
4. Are these models influenced or formed along cultural lines?
5. Thinking back on the last decade and then forward to the next, what are or what do we think the key drivers are that will either reinforce or renounce the traditional ideas of commercial hubs?

At the end of this panel, attendees will be able to:

- Identify the various shifts within commercial design and the benefit to end-users and consequently the community
- Gain an understanding of different commercial models within the region, similarities and unique offerings
- Understand how culture reflects and informs in the various commercial developments throughout the region
- Understand the drivers that reinforce or renounce traditional ideas of commercial hubs
